I met a girl with jaunty hat, With face of marble hue, With beads as num'rous as the stars,

Which shone like spring times' dew.
Aurora's tint upon her cheek
Like soft Italian skies,
A head of hair, dressed a la Greek,
And such bewitching eyas.

Her teeth were made of purest pearl, Her lips of rubyrare,
And as she passed along the street
A perfume filled the air
Like that which pours from Eden's gate
When Peris enter in.

"Ah! yes," I uttered to myself,
"That girl is bound to win."

Again I met her-'twas at home, Reclining on a hed; Her hair was off; her teeth were out, Her cheeks had lost their red. A book lay open in her hand,
(A novel, by the way),
And, as I took a passing glimpse,
I saw it was "Foul Play."

Her old deaf mother sat within, And plied her needle fast, A patching up her furbelows, To make the darned things last. Pinched care was pictured on her brow— Her income was but small— Yet, for her sliks, and beads, and hair, The daughter used it all.

Put in her teeth, stuck on her hair, And fixed herself for "biz." Then stopping near her mother dear, In accents foud did call,
"Old woman! hurry up my thing s,
I'm going to the hall!"

A GEORGIA HAY FARM. Rev. C. W. Howard, of Kingston, Ga., whose "Manual of Grasses" has attracted deserved attention, has sent to the Rural Carolinian, for publication, the following interesting letter from Mr. N. B. Moore, of Augusta, Ga., whom we have long known as a reliable man and successful farmer: "In answer to your questions, I would say fifteen cents as fare, being at the rate that, after an experience of upwards of of five cents per mile, as provided by forty years in cultivating grasses of the charter of the company. The second yield of clover is uniformly eaten up by grasshoppers. The taproot remains to fertilize the then coming Guinen grass, which should be out when from two to three feet high. My barn will contain 250 tons of hav. I know of no point this side of the island of Jamaica where the seed of the Guinea grass can be obtained. It would not answer a Northern climate. On such land as mine it will afford three or four cuttings if the seasons are propitious. I use an average of five tons of gypsum soon after the first cutting, and about the same quantity of the best fertilizers in March or April. I use mowing machines. The grass, which is cut before noon, is put up with horse sulky rakes in cocks before sundown. I believe in shelter and paint for the preservation of every tool. I have wagons built in 1852 and 1853; also carts and harrows of like age now perfectly sound. My experience and observation teach me that farmers, as a class, to be successful, require more brains than any of the so-called learned profession."

As a pioneer in the production of hay in the South, Mr. Moore's experience is valuable, and we shall refer to it at length in future articles.

WOOL PROBUCTION IN THE SOUTH In the address of the Jefferson county, Arkansas, Grange to the Subordinate Granges, we find some statements of general interest to agricultural readers. There is wisdom in the suggestion that planters, even in the superior cotton districts of Arkansas, should diversify their agriculture, by devoting more land to corn, I grass and hay, and less to cotton. Jefferson county lies on both sides of the Arkansas river, and its capital is forty-five miles below Little Rock, and sixty above the Mississippi. In the county are about eight hundred and fifty sections of land; one hundred and thirtyfive miles of which lie on the river and fifty miles on sundry lakes. Pine Bluff, the county seat, is a handsome, flourishing town, which contains some forty stores and three thousand inhabitants, and stands on a high bluff near the river, not far from the center of the county. This contains fifteen thousand inhabitants, who would be glad to receive immigrants enough to double their population. The address says they need more field hands, and that Tennessee, dississippi and Georgia can supply sev eral thousand. If colored people were wise, they might, by their honesty and industry. command high wages. There are millions of acres of the best swamp lands where the white race cannot labor in summer season on account of sickness, while the African race can cultivate corn, cotton and sugar cane, on these rich soils with perfect immunity. Considering the value of Southern staples, sincluding rice and sea-island cotton, nature gives the negro great and peculiar advantages as an operative planter; but what his effspring will be worth for planting purposes forty years hence, is a very uncertain quantity. By that time the United States will contain between eighty and one hundred million of the most energetic and industrious of the Caucasian family; many pestilential river bottoms will be drained, cleared, and made healthy to the white man. Millions of the latter will become acclimated like Texas cattle, which, while infected so as to impart fatal disease to other stock raised in a different and healthy climate, do not themselves suffer in flesh or soundness of constitution. Southern farmers should consider the fact that the civilized world is beginsays: "While nearly all the corn in this | ning to prefer light woolen goods for summer wear to cotton, such as worsted and delaine fabrics, and, consequently, er's corn was as green and luxuriant as combing-wool and Cotswold sheep should be raised in the South to meet which was caused by deep plowing. this growing demand.
